BEAR METAL - 158 LOW TEMP ALLOY

We now carry BEAR METAL - 158 LOW TEMP ALLOY exclusively.

Bearmetal-158 is a low melting point eutectic alloy with about the same weight as pure lead, but melts at about 158 degrees Fahrenheit. It can be used for a variety of model railroading applications such as weighting locomotives and rolling stock as well as casting detail parts. Bearmetal can be poured directly into plastic loco shells filling cavities and voids completely, although care must be taken not to heat the metal any higher than it takes to liquefy it. Bearmetal can be melted in a small vessel over a stove or hot plate. It can even be melted in a cooking pouch in boiling water. Easy to work with Bearmetal can be re-melted any number of times with little effect on the alloy properties. The product comes with full instructions, tips for use and safety guidelines.
